TRUMP FIGHTS FOR SUPPORT AHEAD OF VOTE

While paying little attention to the details of the House Republican effort, Trump has put considerable effort into shoring up the bill, actively courting conservative lawmakers with objections to the bill. In a trip to Capitol Hill on Tuesday he warned Republicans that failure could have sharp repercussions in next year's congressional mid-term elections. Trump kept up his efforts to sell the plan, called the American Health Care Act, on Wednesday, meeting with a group of House members at the White House. He declined to say what he would do if the proposed legislation fails in the House. Asked if he would keep pushing the bill, he told reporters: "We'll see what happens."

NORTH KOREA MISSILE TEST FAILS

A North Korean missile appeared to have exploded just after it was launched, the U.S. and South Korean militaries said after detecting the latest in a series of weapons tests by the nuclear-armed state that have alarmed the region. The launch attempt was made near the city of Wonsan, on North Korea's east coast, the same place it launched several intermediate-range missiles last year, all but one of which failed. "U.S. Pacific Command detected what we assess was a failed North Korean missile launch attempt ... in the vicinity of Kalma," Commander Dave Benham, a spokesman for U.S. Pacific Command, said in a statement, referring to an air field in Wonsan. "A missile appears to have exploded within seconds of launch," Benham said, adding that a more detailed assessment was underway. REUTERS

TILLERSON PLEDGES SAFE AREAS FOR REFUGEES

Secretary of State Rex Tillerson said the United States would set up "interim zones of stability" to help refugees return home in the next phase of the fight against Islamic State and al Qaeda in Syria and Iraq. The top U.S. diplomat did not make clear where these zones were to be set up. He was addressing a meeting of 68 countries and organizations gathered in Washington to discuss accelerating the battle against Islamic State. "The United States will increase our pressure on ISIS and al Qaeda and will work to establish interim zones of stability, through cease-fires, to allow refugees to return home," Tillerson told the gathering at the State Department, where he was hosting his first major diplomatic event. ILLINOIS BILLS SEEK TO LEGALIZE, TAX MARIJUANA

Illinois would legalize marijuana for recreational use by adults and tax it to raise at least $350 million a year for the cash-strapped state under legislation introduced. Two Democratic lawmakers sponsoring the bills said the measures pending before the House and Senate would allow law enforcement to focus on other crimes and enable the state to create a system for regulating and taxing marijuana sales. Adults aged 21 and older would be able to possess, grow, and purchase limited amounts of marijuana, under the legislation. Businesses cultivating, processing, testing and selling pot would be licensed and regulated by the state, which would also impose labeling requirements and marketing restrictions. State Sen. Heather Steans said money would flow to licensed, taxpaying businesses instead of to criminals. REUTERS

Pharmacist guilty of racketeering in deadly meningitis outbreak

Company president Barry Cadden was acquitted of murder in the case.

The co-founder of a now-defunct Massachusetts compounding pharmacy was found guilty of racketeering and fraud, but cleared of murder, on Wednesday for his role in a 2012 meningitis outbreak that killed 64 people across the United States.

Barry Cadden, who was a co-owner and president of New England Compounding Center, was convicted by a federal jury in Boston after a two-month trial centered on an outbreak linked to the company's drug that sickened 753 people in 20 states.

He was acquitted of 25 counts of second-degree murder.

Cadden faces a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison for each of the 52 mail fraud charges of which he was convicted. Sentencing is scheduled for June 21.

The outbreak was the largest U.S. public health crisis involving a pharmaceutical drug. It led to new regulations on compounding pharmacies, which mix drugs but had been treated with a lighter hand than registered drug manufacturers.

Cadden, 50, showed no emotion as a court official read the verdict from the jury of nine women and three men.

Prosecutors argued that Cadden, who was the head pharmacist for Framingham, Massachusetts-based NECC, directed the shipment of vials of contaminated steroids to hospital customers nationally even though he knew they were made in unsafe, insanitary conditions.

"It was preventable, but it happened because this man, Barry Cadden, decided to put profits before patients," Assistant U.S. Attorney Amanda Strachan told the jury during closing arguments.

Lawyers for Cadden conceded at trial that the outbreak stemmed from steroids NECC manufactured. But they argued prosecutors had overreached in accusing Cadden of murder, saying there was no proof he acted intentionally and knew people could die if they were injected with the steroids.

After the outbreak, inspectors found multiple possible sources of contamination, including standing water, mold and bacteria in the air and on workers' gloves. NECC filed for bankruptcy after it was slammed with hundreds of lawsuits from victims or their families. NECC and several related companies reached a $200 million civil settlement with victims and their families.

In 2013, Congress increased federal oversight of compounding pharmacies, which mix personalized medications for patients and supply them directly to hospitals and doctors. REUTERS

ACLU: End mandatory minimum drug sentences to address racial inequalities

In Massachusetts, black and Latino inmates make up 75 percent of those serving those sentences.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

The ACLU of Massachusetts is calling for the repeal of mandatory minimum drug sentencing, saying it unfairly targets minority offenders, particularly blacks, who are imprisoned at a rate roughly eight times that of white people.

In Massachusetts, black and Latino people account for 22 percent of the population yet comprise 75 percent of those serving sentences for mandatory minimum drug offenses, according to state reports from September.

While the state legislature is considering changes to its criminal justice system, the proposals fail to address issues of race and focus only on repeat offenders, said the ACLU's Raheem Hall, who directs the Racial Justice Program. Gov. Charlie Baker's criminal justice reform bill that was introduced in February also doesn't suggest changing mandatory minimums.

But change is needed, Hall said. The September report highlights the disparity among minority and white criminal offenders in the commonwealth.

Black people in Massachusetts are incarcerated at about eight times the rate of white people, according to the state Sentencing Commission's report. Nationally, that rate is 6 to 1. Latino people in Massachusetts are incarcerated at five times the rate of white people; nearly four times higher than the national rate.

Hall said several of the most common arguments against doing away with the mandatory minimum drug sentences are rooted in common misperceptions. The first one, he said, is that people think there aren't that many inmates serving those sentences.

There are around 900 people in Massachusetts serving mandatory minimum drug sentences, Hall said. But, he added, another 1,800 inmates who faced that mandatory minimum ended up pleading guilty to reduced charges.

In many instances, Hall said, those plea deals were not "that much different than the full mandatory minimum sentence would have been."

Hall said people also incorrectly presume offenders serving mandatory minimums are the ones trafficking drugs.

Most of the people sentenced are addicts and suffer from substance abuse issues, but are not actually dealing or trafficking, he said.

Getting caught with 18 grams of cocaine, methamphetamine and heroin is considered trafficking, although it is the equivalent of about four and half packets of sugar, Hall said. "People don't realize that small amount yields a mandatory minimum sentence."

Someone caught with 18 to 36 grams of cocaine faces a mandatory minimum of 2 years, though that person could serve up to 15 years, according to state law. For the same amount of heroin, a convicted individual faces 3.5 to 30 years.

The commonwealth is making some progress though, Hall said, in the area of drug reform. In November, voters passed a law to make recreational marijuana legal.

"We saw a dramatic drop in arrests when marijuana was decriminalized in 2012," he said. "And now with raising the personal possession amount and legalizing it for recreational use, there will be fewer individuals who will be charged and arrested."

Federal authorities publish list of 'uncooperative' sanctuary cities

Immigration Customs and Enforcement list takes aim at communities Trump administration says have lax immigration policy.

ERIN TIERNAN
@erintiernan
erin.tiernan@metro.us

Officials are speaking out against a federal Immigration and Customs Enforcement list they say is aimed at shaming communities that identify as sanctuary cities and towns.

The 35-page report calls out more than 100 communities, including Boston, New York City and Philadelphia, and says they are "uncooperative" with the Trump administration's efforts to detain and deport illegal immigrants.

Communities with so-called sanctuary policies often choose not to detain illegal immigrants at the request of ICE, which is part of the Department of Homeland Security, unless the individuals are convicted of serious crimes or are wanted under a federal warrant.

Immigration and Customs Enforcement published a first weekly report on communities who are "uncooperative" with Trump Administration deportation goals. GETTY IMAGES

The ICE report details 206 instances, including some in New York City and Philadelphia, between Jan. 28 and Feb. 3, when federal "detainer" requests were denied.

A detainer is a request made by ICE to local authorities to hold an undocumented immigrant in custody for up to 48 hours "to allow DHS to assume custody for removal purposes."

Proponents of sanctuary cities say their policies promote safer communities and trust between the police and the public, and preserve families.

The report, which ICE says will be updated weekly, was prompted by a January executive order in which Trump promised a crackdown on communities that promote sanctuary policies. The president has threatened to withhold federal funding from such communities.

Several officials pointed out inaccuracies in the report after it was published Monday. ICE has made 14 corrections so far.

Providence Mayor

Jorge Elorza told the Associated Press that while Rhode Island does not generally honor ICE detainer requests, it was included on the list over a nonbinding city resolution from 2011, which Elorza claimed wasn't about detainers.

"They cast a very broad net in who they included in this list. We're all still trying to figure out what is accomplished by this list, and also how it's going to be used," he said.

Other cities where sanctuary policies instructing law enforcement not to comply with detainer requests in the case of illegal immigrants who have either not committed a crime or are nonviolent offenders exist were not included on ICE's list, WGBH reported.

The debate on how to deal with the 11 million undocumented immigrants catapulted back into the national spotlight Tuesday during a White House news briefing.

Press Secretary Sean Spicer discussed the rape of a Rockville High School student, allegedly by two undocumented immigrants. He used the example from the Maryland school to urge state and local officials to examine their immigration policies.

"The president recognizes that education is a state-run and a local-run issue, but I think it is cause for concern what happened there," Spicer said. "And I think the city should look at its policies, and I think that this is something authorities are going to have to look at."

Five dead, at least 20 injured in UK parliament 'terrorist' attack

The dead included the assailant and the policeman he stabbed, while the other two victims were among those hit by the car as it tore along Westminster Bridge before crashing into railings just outside parliament.

Five people were killed and at least 20 injured in London on Wednesday after a car plowed into pedestrians and an attacker stabbed a policeman close to the British parliament in what police called a "marauding terrorist attack".

Prime Minister Theresa May condemned the attack as "sick and depraved".

"The location of this attack was no accident," she said in a statement outside her Downing Street office late in the evening.

"The terrorist chose to strike at the heart of our capital city, where people of all nationalities, religions and cultures come together to celebrate the values of liberty, democracy and freedom of speech."

Any attempt to defeat those values through violence was "doomed to failure," May said.

Mark Rowley, Britain's most senior counter-terrorism officer, told reporters the attack started when a car was driven over Westminster Bridge, hitting and injuring members of the public and three police officers.

"A car then crashed near to parliament and at least one man, armed with a knife, continued the attack and tried to enter parliament," Rowley said.

It was the deadliest attack in London since four British Islamists killed 52 commuters and themselves in suicide bombings on the city's transport system in July 2005, London's worst peacetime attack.

Reuters reporters inside parliament during Wednesday's attack heard loud bangs and shortly afterward saw the knifeman and the stabbed policeman lying on the ground in a courtyard within the gates of parliament.

A woman was pulled alive, but with serious injuries, from the Thames, the Port of London Authority said. The circumstances of her fall into the river were unknown.

Three French schoolchildren aged 15 or 16 were among those injured in the attack, French officials said. REUTERS

Brad Pitt makes sculptures, talks to Angelina sometimes

Stop the presses! Angelina Jolie and Brad Pitt are on speaking terms now.

People reports that the two are making peace and have talked to each other directly. It's been six months since their epic separation last September. A source tells the mag Pitt is much happier now, thank you very much. "He's relieved that things are not playing out in public anymore." Me, too! It was getting messy AF.

"He's always been extremely positive about how Angie's a good mother, and the goal was to resolve everything for the kids and the whole family," the source continues.

Meanwhile, Daily Mail is very exclusively reporting that Pitt is spending his spare time making sculptures and listening to Bon Iver. So emo!

Congrats to these two adults for getting it together. I'm very proud.

Lena Dunham is saying words again.

The 30-year-old recently opened up on "Ellen" about how mean people are being to her about losing weight. Mmkay, pumpkin. "It's just so crazy because I spent six years of my career being called things like 'bag of milk' on the internet," Dunham told Ellen DeGeneres earlier this week. OK, yeah, "bag of milk" is rude. Nobody wants to be called a bag of milk, probably.

Some people have called the writer and actress a hypocrite because they felt like her weight loss goes against like, her whole brand. "I had this experience of my body changing and suddenly I had all these people being like, 'You're a hypocrite, I thought you were body positive,'" she says. "I was frustrated by it because it really was evidence that as a woman in Hollywood, you just can't win."

Later in the interview, Dunham put her leg behind her head and told Ellen, "You can't do this in front of anyone without them thinking, she's probably pretty good at sex."

As always, Lena Dunham is her own greatest enemy.

Jake Gyllenhaal plus Ryan Reynolds equals bromance

Jake Gyllenhaal and Ryan Reynolds are working hard to let you know that A) they really enjoyed working together on set of "Life," a new age "Alien" rip off; and B) that they are just so very fond of each other and nothing — not even a desperate plea from Blake Lively herself — will stop them.

According to Daily Mail, Gyllenhaal, 36, said they were scolded by producers and told that all of their goofing off on set was wasting money. Both Gyllenhaal and Reynolds, 40, found this to be just hilarious. Mmm, there's nothing quite like a grown man who needs a stern talking to for childish behavior. Sign me up!

Then, the two hunky brosephs got together with Wired to answer the web's most-searched questions about themselves. Reynolds uses swamp water to style his hair! Gyllenhaal does his own stunts, unless they're too dangerous — then he doesn't! They're having such a great time just laughing with each other and it's not remotely insufferable, I promise.

"Life" comes out March 24 and is not based on the cereal or the board game.

Demi Lovato is so chill, very relatable

Demi Lovato would like you to know that she is absolutely not fazed by those so-called nude photos that leaked. OK?

According to Refinery29, the 24-year-old is the latest female celebrity that's been targeted by hackers leaking personal and intimate images online. Other victims include Emma Watson and Amanda Seyfried. In Lovato's leaked image, she's shown lying in bed with her top unzipped.

The pop star took to Twitter to tell everyone to settle down. "I love how everyone's freaking out about one picture," she wrote. "It's not nude and it's just cleavage." She posted another tweet, noting that she's gotten real-life naked before for Vanity Fair, and took advantage of a variety of hashtags like #cleavage-gameon-point and #myboobsarenteventhatbig. She's just like, one of those cool girls who's just like, so relatable, you know?

While Lovato is super chill about the leaked photos, it is worth noting — to all you hackers out there who apparently don't know better — that leaking private pictures of female celebrities is pretty disgusting. Leaking private anything of anyone is horrible.

And that's not chill, at all.

The Olsen twins love old dudes

The Olsen twins sure have a type.

The Daily Mail reports that Ashley, 30, has just split from her boyfriend of five months. He's a financier named Richard Sachs and he's 58-years-old. OK!

A source says the two split because Ashley wants to focus Elizabeth and James, a fashion label she shares with sister Mary-Kate.

Speaking of, Mary-Kate is married to Olivier Sarkozy, who is 47-years-old and works in finance. So yeah, these two have a type. Old and rich. Which is pretty smart, if you think about it.

Mixed feelings over the Disney 'Princesses' Avengers movie

Geek Girl in Hollywood

legionoffela.com

There is allegedly a spec script floating around Hollywood called "Princesses," which has fairytale princesses teaming up à la the Avengers. It immediately piqued my interest, in both positive and negative ways.

I was a Disney fan as a kid. Though I never aspired to be a princess (unless we're talking about Princess Leia), I certainly loved the films. And yet there was something that bothered me, even as a kid. I wanted to be an actress, an astronaut, a writer, a paleontologist, an anthropologist. None of the princesses when I was a kid ended up doing anything other than being the wife of some prince. It wasn't until I was much older that we got Belle, Elsa, Mulan, etc. I would have loved them as a kid, but they just weren't there yet.

Then I thought about the fact that, though I didn't aspire to be a princess, I did enjoy watching them. I thought about my initial reaction to "DC Superhero Girls," which was, "Why are we separate from the boys?" Then one of the writers told me it was her goal to make sure little girls knew all the female DC superheroes and how empowering they were. I was willing to change my mind.

Looking at the way Disney princesses have changed, I fell in love with this idea of "Princesses." There is no way we'd accept a weak princess anymore. Now we have the amazing Tiana from "The Princess and the Frog." We have the new Rapunzel. Emma Watson's Belle is not just the well-read, strong princess from the animated film. Now we see her teaching other girls to read and not being OK with captivity.

I would love to see these ladies team up and save the world. I'd love to see them change the perceptions of even more little girls. So, go for it. Princesses assemble!

Meet 'Power Rangers' co-star Naomi Scott

A new Hollywood "it" talks about making her big screen debut.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Naomi Scott had a big problem while making "Saban's Power Rangers": There was a pizzeria under the apartment she was staying in.

"It was the best pizza in Vancouver, and the best gelato. It's the worst combination when you're trying to be strict," the actress recalls. "Every now and again and I'd treat myself to a pizza."

Scott still kept in shape while making the new blockbuster, which reboots the '90s children's show about a quintet of superpowered high schoolers who fight big monsters, sometimes while joined together as one big robot, "Voltron"-style. But Scott refuses to adhere to the idea of starving yourself to look fit.

"You pick your days. It's all about having balance. Was I stricter than normal? Yes. But it was also very difficult because you're doing long hours and you're going from night shoots to day shoots. You need the energy. You can't be eating just leaves," she tells us. "I don't like to deprive myself. I'm good at being strict and I know what I have to do to stay in shape. But on a weekend I'll try something. I'm going to have a dessert."

"Power Rangers" is Scott's second big Hollywood movie, but her first in a co-lead role. (She had a small part in "The Martian.") She plays

Kimberly, aka the one that gets the pink spandex body suit. The new film isn't exactly a gritty reboot, but it does try to add some seriousness to the smackdown fun. Kimberly is one of five teens who are tasked with becoming defenders of Earth, and must battle an alien invader named Rita Repulsa (Elizabeth Banks.)

Kimberly is a strong female character, but Scott wishes we didn't have to have the discussion about how Hollywood should create meatier roles for women.

"It's a conversation that obviously needs to happen, but it's crazy because it shouldn't need to be," Scott says. "It's like, 'We have to talk about it, but why?'"

That said, while Scott, 23, doesn't have vivid memories of watching the show as a kid, she does remember one thing that made it ahead-of-the-curve: its casually diverse cast, with different genders and ethnicities.

"What I do remember is playing 'Power Rangers.' And the reason I was very excited to play it was that there were girls. That's something so simple, but it's actually really important. That's why so many girls still like it," Scott says. Back then, there weren't many superpowered fe-

TALKS

Claudia Rankine: On Whiteness

Rather than distracting us with visions of an ideal, perfectly equal society, contemporary sociopolitical discourse on race exposes the inequality that exists now. A big part of that is awakening white people to their privileged status. That's author and MacArthur genius Claudia Rankine's topic here. You may think you're on board, but go listen and see if you learn something new. March 24, 6 p.m. Cutler Majestic Theater, 219 Tremont St., Boston Free, artsemerson.org

THEATER

"Octavia E. Butler's Parable of the Sower: A Concert Performance"

Running the gamut of African-American musical history, this performance brings science fiction author Octavia E. Butler's novel "The Parable of the Sower" to life. Adapted by daughter-mother team Toshi and Bernice Johnson Reagon, it imagines a near-future in which climate change has devastated society. In this vicious world, a new religion emerges, founded on the intriguing principle that "God is change." March 23-26 Paramount Center, 559 Washington St., Boston $10-$90, artsemerson.org

"Franklin"

This drama by Samantha Noble tells two stories, that of the doomed 1845 Franklin expedition to the North Pole, and of a modern researcher trying to learn more about the events of the tragic mission, which took the lives of all involved. The story has captivated the public imagination ever since — Noble's is one in a long line of tellings. March 23-April 2 Boston Playwrights' Theater, 949 Comm. Ave., Boston $10-$30, bu.edu/bpt

MOVIES

Boston Underground Film Festival

Each year, this fest brings you the weirdest and most messed-up collection of indie films they can find. Scary, eerie, freaky, kinky, brutally hilarious: These movies go nowhere if not all-out. It closes out on Sunday with Marianna Palka's highly praised 2016 satire "Bitch," in which a neglected housewife has a nervous breakdown and begins to believe she's a dog. PERFORMANCE

Tyaphaka

Castle of our Skins presents this unique work of African-American performance, combining dance, music and visual art. Its title comes from a long, creaturelike sculpture by South African artist Nicholas Hlobo, made of inner tubing and ribbons. For the piece's debut in Sydney, Hlobo insisted that half of it be submerged in the harbor, where it collected algae and bird droppings. "Sherlock Holmes and the Sapphire Night"

Presented by the New Haven troupe Circularity, this is a feminist-themed Sherlock Holmes story told with a mostly female cast and the use of circus arts, including Spanish web, Chinese pole, lyra, contortion, hand balancing, diabolo, acrobatics and more. If that's something you've seen before, we'd be impressed.

Two collaborations between Werner Herzog and Klaus Kinski will play at Coolidge this weekend. PROVIDED

It takes two

SEAN BURNS
@SeanMBurns
sean@metro.us

The mad, mercurial Klaus Kinski appeared in over 130 films but nobody ever worked with him twice. Nobody except for Werner Herzog, that is. The impossible actor met his match in the fearless filmmaker, collaborating five times on wildly ambitious and perilous projects that could very well have killed them were they not so busy almost murdering each other.

This weekend Coolidge After Midnite presents two of Herzog's Kinski collaborations to remind us what a dangerous director everybody's kooky Teutonic uncle once was. Friday at midnight brings 1979's "Nosferatu The Vampyre," a despairingly haunted remake of F.W. Murnau's 1922 classic. But the main event arrives Saturday at 11:30, with a long-awaited 35mm screening of the director's legendary "Fitzcarraldo," a great movie with a production so arduous it inspired an equally great documentary (Les Blank's "Burden of Dreams"). Kinski gives his warmest performance as a quixotic dreamer who wants to build an opera house in the middle of the Amazon. To do so he first must drag a steamship over a mountain from one river to another. Never one to do things the easy way, Herzog decided to shoot the film 500 miles deep into the Peruvian rain forest without benefit of special effects.

In this digitized culture it can be difficult for our over-mediated eyes to determine what's ones and zeroes, until you see a film like "Fitzcarraldo" and experience once again the shock of the real. It's granular detail on a massive scale, with images full of intricacies not even the most sophisticated F/X effects department could conjure. That's an actual boat going over an actual mountain, and a big screen experience beyond compare.

"Voice" alumna
Rebecca Loebe
returns to Boston.

HEATHER ALTERISIO
@HeathAlt
Heather.Alterisio@metro.us

Rebecca Loebe — does that name ring a bell?

The now Austin-based singer-songwriter made waves on the first season of "The Voice" when she performed Nirvana's "Come As You Are," landing her a spot on Adam Levine's team. Before that, the 33-year-old worked full-time in the music business, working at a recording studio in South Boston and eventually producing two full-length studio albums of her own. In her own words, she describes her sound as "lyrically-driven acoustic folk rock." Want a taste?

The Berklee College of Music alum returns to Cambridge on March 24 to promote her fourth album "Blink," featuring what Loebe considers her best work.

Got writer's block? Start a songwriting group

Five years after her last album, Loebe found inspiration for this album following a songwriting retreat she attended in West Texas. It was soon after that she started her own Monday night songwriting group — an idea taken from Jack Hardy, the Greenwich Village folk musician who hosted a Monday evening songwriter's circle back in the '70s.

"It immediately had an impact on my creative output because I had this deadline — this weekly deadline of other writers coming over and I had to finish up whatever idea was haunting me."

She jokes that it also provided her with a social life, as she had yet to create one since moving to Austin, Texas. Through the songwriting group, she wrote tracks "Forever Young Forever" and "Lie." From there, it just flowed.

"Everything I had written up to that point was basically my brain clearing its throat, but then I had gotten to where I wanted to be and the statement I wanted to make, and what my themes were."

A little IRS inspiration ...

"A little bit later in the year, I got audited by the IRS, which was kind of funny," she remembers.

Loebe defended herself, with her lawyer's guidance and blessing. (He apparently even joked, "Plus I know how much you make, and know you can't afford to pay me to do it.") And it was in that entire month preparing for the audit, that Loebe found distraction in songwriting.

"As you can imagine, I was finding myself very inspired all the time."

Loebe was doing music full time for about five years before auditioning for "The Voice."

"I had stress dreams about it every night for six months after I left," Loebe admits. She did not advance past the battle rounds, but she was the only nonsemifinalist with a song on "The Voice: Season 1 Highlights."

"I just love listening to you sing ... in a genuine way," Levine told her.

There was what she considers "tangible results" (i.e. social media following, more people on her email list, CD sales, etc.). Still, she says, "The biggest takeaway was actually completely intangible and that was by being a constant on the show. I really learned what it feels like to be judged — by an audience, by my employers, a panel of judges."

As far as 2017, Loebe hopes to keep pushing her music, finding new audiences and writing songs that make her feel as happy as she is with "Blink."

"It's the most satisfied I've felt with a body of work I've put out."

We've got ideas for your trip to Florida's emerging family friendly destination.

With March going out like a lion, it's the perfect time to escape the cold for the subtropical climes of Tampa. The Florida city is particularly good for families, who can enjoy the warm weather and an endless array of activities, plus bargains.

For those looking to experience the best of Tampa, check out CityPass, which is a thrifty way to take in some of the most popular attractions. CityPass ($106 for adults, $96 for children 3-9) offers considerable bang for the buck, with deals like 51 percent off full-price attraction tickets.

Thanks to CityPass, we braved the thrilling a biplane, among many other exhibits.

The museum is right next to Tampa's new Riverwalk, a scenic 2.4-mile stretch that's a haven for joggers, bicyclists and sun worshippers along the East Hillsborough River. Children gather at a new playground, while adults relax along the romantic docks and canopies.

Just off the shore there are eight restaurants, four museums and 18 historical monuments along Riverwalk. Annual events like the Gasparilla Concert Festival and RiverFest, which is slated for May 6-7, take advantage of downtown's newest addition.

It's never too early to expose kids to art. Every Saturday the Tampa Museum of Art hosts a free drop-in program for children and families who would like to work on art projects inspired by the museum's vast collection.

PICARD: NOBODY DESERVES AN INVITE TO THE PARTY MORE THAN ALLEN

@dannypicard

Without Ray Allen, there is no party.

That's something the 2008 Boston Celtics need to understand, as they plan a 10-year anniversary destination-vacation.

Rajon Rondo is running the trip, which, according to ESPN's Marc Spears, will be at an undisclosed international location. Rondo talked with Spears recently about not inviting Allen, referencing Allen's decision to "go with the enemy" when he left the Celtics to sign with the Miami Heat in the summer of 2012. Rondo didn't have the best relationship with Allen, but the former C's point guard implied to Spears that he was just following orders from "a couple of the other vets" when deciding not to extend the invite to Allen.

It's not a stretch to believe "the other vets" that Rondo was referring to are Paul Pierce and Kevin Garnett. The breakup of the "Big Three" was well-documented, and clearly the bad blood — from the Celtics' side at least —

Celtics fans will never stop remembering and talking about the 2008 Big Three. GETTY IMAGES still exists.

But as much as I love watching Pierce and Garnett continue to bleed green, they look awfully foolish in this situation. Because without Allen, there wouldn't even be a championship party to attend. For there would be no championship.

Heck, without Allen, Garnett might have never even been a Celtic.

One week before the 2007 NBA Draft, Garnett's agent Andy Miller told

ESPN's Chris Sheridan that "the Boston trade isn't happening," after the Celtics and Minnesota Timberwolves reportedly agreed in principle to a trade. Garnett wanted it to be known that, if the trade went through, he would not sign an extension to stay in Boston after the 2007-08 season. His agent told ESPN, "If a trade were to happen, that's not a destination that we're interested in pursuing."

A week after the Celtics' initial attempt to acquire Garnett fell through, they traded the No. 5 overall pick to Seattle on draft night, for Allen.

All of a sudden, Boston wasn't such a terrible place to play. And one month later, Garnett had a change of heart, agreeing to sign an extension to stay in Boston long-term, which finalized his trade to the Celtics.

It was Allen who forced that change of heart.

Garnett joined forces with Pierce and Allen to form the Celtics' new "Big Three." And they went on to win the 2008 NBA championship and make another NBA Finals appearance in 2010.

In the summer of 2012, Allen turned down an offer from the Celtics and signed with the rival Miami Heat. Allen won a championship in his first season with Miami. It's a move that clearly still infuriates Pierce and Garnett.

But perhaps they're forgetting what Allen meant to their five-year run in Boston. Without him, there's no championship. Not just because he wouldn't be knocking down three's in green. But also because, without him, Garnett would have never accepted a trade to Boston. And also, without him, who knows how Pierce would have reacted to another losing season, especially after how he expressed his frustrations with the organization's rebuild to the Globe's Jackie MacMullan during the 2006-07 season.

Without Allen, not only would Garnett never have been a Celtic, but it sounded like Pierce might have wanted a trade out of Boston that summer. Then what?

There would be no 2008 Championship. That's for sure.

It helped that Allen was an All-Star, of course. But before he even played a game with the Celtics, his mere presence on the roster was enough to keep Pierce around and convince Garnett to join them.

I'd say that's worth an invite to the party. In fact, come to think of it, nobody deserves one more than him.

NCAA Sweet 16 preview: What not to miss when the action resumes

The Sweet 16 begins on Thursday with the Midwest and West Regionals and as is usually the case, there are basically nothing but heavyweight programs left.

No. 3 Oregon (31-5) and No. 8 Michigan kick things off on Thursday (7:09 p.m., CBS) in Kansas City. I believe that this will be the most entertaining game of the four and Las Vegas seems to agree with me since it has the closest point-spread (Michigan is favored by one point). Oregon survived a major scare by Rhode Island in the second round, 75-72. Michigan has played two very close games as they outlasted Oklahoma State 92-91 in a first round track meet and then upset Louisville 73-69 in the second round.

The eighth-seeded Wolverines have a chance to be this year's Cinderella story. GETTY IMAGES

No. 1 Gonzaga (34-1) finally faces a legitimate test in No. 4 West Virginia (28-8) after they dispatched of South Dakota State, 66-46, in the first round and tournament newcomer Northwestern 79-73 in the second round. It feels like Mountaineers head coach Bob Huggins' teams always step up in March and they got here by beating Bucknell, 86-80, in an entertaining opener and they notched an impressive 83-71 victory versus Notre Dame in the second round. West Virginia is paced by junior point guard Jevon Carter who had 24 points against the Irish.

No. 1 Kansas (30-4) vs. No. 4 Purdue (27-7) is an intriguing Big 12 vs. Big 10 matchup. It has the highest projected point total of the night (156.5 points) which should make for a nice high-scoring contest. Jayhawks freshman swingman Josh Jackson was impressive in Kansas' 90-70 demolition of Michigan State in the second round with a game-high 23 points, two blocks and two steals. His athleticism was on full display, why he'll be a top three pick this summer in the NBA draft. Boilermakers sophomore power forward Caleb Swanigan is a double-double machine, he had 20 points and 12 rebounds in their 80-76 second-round win over Iowa State.

Finally, No. 2 Arizona (32-4) vs. No. 11 Xavier (23-13) at least on paper looks like the only game on Thursday that could be a mismatch. Then again, the Musketeers destroyed No. 3 Florida State 91-66 in the second round so it's hard to completely overlook them. The Wildcats dropped 100 on North Dakota (who scored 82) in the first round while they struggled to put away St. Mary's in the second round before eventually winning 69-60. If Xavier is going to upset their former head coach Sean Miller and his club, they'll need another huge game from junior guard Trevon Bluiett, who scored 21 in their first-round upset of Maryland, then 29 against Florida State. Aries A little charm and a whole lot of compassion will help you complete pending projects and resolve problems or uncertainties you face. Romance is favored.

Taurus Putting pressure on someone who opposes you will help you get your way if you do so in a persuasive manner. Offer an incentive to push matters along quickly.

Gemini Do what's best for yourself and aim to improve how you present your personality and abilities. Love and romance are encouraged, and partnerships can be formed.

Cancer Look inward and consider what you can do to make personal improvements. A better health routine or more nutritious diet will do you good. Avoid excessive behavior.

Leo Partnerships, meetings and collaboration look promising. Your knowledge and desire to get ahead will lead to an opportunity that is too good to refuse.

Virgo You can negotiate a deal or make alterations to your living arrangements, but don't go overboard when it comes to spending or you will end up frustrated.

Libra Children, friends and loved ones will play important roles in the way you respond to your current situation. Draw strength and courage from the wisdom being offered you.

Scorpio Chill out and do something creative. Work toward a goal that requires only your input. Don't take risks or get involved in an emotional battle.

Sagittarius If you share your feelings with someone you love, it will lead to plans that will improve your standard of living and boost a personal relationship.

Capricorn A conversation will be misleading. If you are uncertain regarding what's expected of you or the cost involved, ask questions and get answers in writing.

Aquarius You've got spunk, but that doesn't mean you should get into an emotional spat. Let bygones be bygones. The sweetest revenge is your own success.

Pisces A persuasive approach when dealing with others will help you get what you want. If you express your desires colorfully, you'll attract interest. EUGENIA LAST
